GEN. CAMERO AND THE NEGRO.—General Cameron, American Minister to St. Petersburg, now in agreement with the Emperor, is known to be a very agreeable and a very good talker. Some of his sketches of the scene he witnessed at the Old World recall the vivid pictures so admirably presented of his experience in Europe by the lamented Stephen A. Douglas. General Cameron not only saw the exterior and interior of Russia—but its public and domestic life, its history and its performance—its Emperor and its Emperess—but he traveled through observed intelligently the manner and customs of Italy, Germany, France, Scotland, Ireland, and England. One incident, which he relates with great humor, is reproduced in the columns of the Daily Chronicle.

Arriving in a small German town on the evening of Waisentide—which is a famous and favorite holiday with the Lutherans—he was struck with the decent and comfortable appearance of the people who crowded the streets; but what most interested him was the tall, stout, and impressive negro, far bigger than Old Sam, who before he was represented as a highly colored gentleman, was now seen to be an American negro, Mr. Cameron went up to him and said: "How are you, my friend?"—using the Pennsylvania German, in which the General is a sort of adept—when, to his infinite horror, the colored individual turned upon him and said, in good English, "Well, how are you, American? I am an African-American, and you are an American. I do not want to talk to you. I won't talk to any man who comes from a country professing to be free, in which human beings are held as slaves." And this was said with a magisterial and indignant air that would have been irretrievably severe, if it had not been irresolute.

possibly from his stalwart and subtle antagonist, and supposed he had got rid of him, out on passing into an adjoining saloon with his Secretary, Ray Taylor, to take a glass of lager-beer, he was again confronted by the German Africanus, who recognized his vials of wrath, and concluded by turning to the General and asking him in broad German, "Sagst du mir, was ich dir nicht anrede?" which means, "Do you tell me what I do not say?" (The German Gen. Cameron made inquiry as to the negro, and ascertained that one of the nobility in the neighborhood, who had spent some years in Africa in a scientific and hunting tour, brought back with him to Germany a very handsome native, who, in course of time, developed into the individual that sought the opportunity to administer a rebuke to the American who lived in a country regarding him to be free, yet recognizing the institution of human slavery.)

THE PRESIDENT NOT A POET.—Every few weeks, says The Independent, some newspaper among our exchanges brings to us a poem called "Fride," beginning:

"Why should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

Assigning its authorship to "Abraham Lincoln, esq., now President of the United States." We have been requested to reprint these verses in our columns, but, having no malice against the President, we decline. Since the poem, however, keeps a constant currency by reason of its supposed source, we give instead a note written to one of the editors of this journal by one of the President's private secretaries, more than a year ago:

SUN, SEPTEMBER 12, 1863.

MY DEAR SIR: The President is not the author of the lines which you enclosed. He has no knowledge either of their source or of the rights which concern their publication.

Yours, very truly, JOHN EAT.
